SELF-CONTAINED HYDROELECTRIC GENERATOR

A method and apparatus for generating hydroelectric power from a water source by lifting water from a relatively lower position to a second relatively higher position. The water is siphoned upwards from the lower position to the higher holding level. Water at the higher holding level is allowed to discharge by gravity pull and directed to drive a turbine driven generator, thereby producing electrical power.

FIG 1