Abstract

Method and system for estimating a signal and computer program product

A method for estimating a signal transmitted via a communication channel from a signal received via the communication channel, is described comprising carrying out a channel-dependent transformation of the received signal; and iteratively determining, channel-independently, an estimate for the transmitted signal on the basis of the transformed received signal.

Figure 3