member and elastically expand and contract in the lengthwise direction, wherein at least parts of the elastic members are arranged at locations corresponding to the first adhesive sections or second adhesive sections provided on the belly side sheet member and the back side sheet member, respectively.

Claim 7

The method of producing a disposable diaper according to claim ~~4 or 5~~ 5 or 6, wherein the belly side sheet member and the back side sheet member are each formed of nonwoven fabrics wherein the constituent fibers are oriented in a direction along the widthwise direction of the crotch section sheet member.

Claim 8

The method of producing of a disposable diaper according to any one of claims 5 to 7, wherein the first adhesive sections have a plurality of first adhesive-coated regions arrayed in the widthwise direction of the crotch section sheet member, and wherein among the first adhesive-coated regions, those located on both edges in the widthwise direction of the crotch section sheet member are arranged with gaps provided between them and the adjacent other first adhesive-coated regions.

Claim 9

The method of producing a disposable diaper according to any one of claims 5 to 8, wherein the first adhesive sections are provided on both edges in the lengthwise direction of the crotch section sheet member, and the second adhesive sections are provided on the belly side sheet member and the back side sheet member.