

Abstract

Obstacles (20-22) in the form of orifice plates or discs are installed in a flow channel (5'), bearing a gaseous medium, of the device; the obstacles form cavities acting as resonance spaces between themselves and result in flow forms and pulsations which lead to improved mass transfer with the liquid medium sprayed in through a high-pressure nozzle (8).

(Figure 8)

