ABSTRACT

A semiconductor device may include: a first access line extending in a first direction; a second access line extending in a second direction intersecting the first direction; and a memory cell connected between the first access line and the second access line and including an electrode including a dielectric barrier therein.

FIG. 4A