

ABSTRACT

A cancer detection method characterised in that a nematode is bred in the presence of bio-related material originating from a test subject, or a processed product
5 of same, and cancer is detected using the chemotaxis due to the sense of smell of the nematode as an indicator.