What is claimed is:

1. A hood, comprising:

a hood main body having an opening for exposing a face to a front surface; and a belt-like or string-like holder for holding a bridge portion of glasses in such a manner that upper portions of lens portions of the glasses are accommodated in an upper portion inner side of the opening, the glasses being worn on an eye area, having the lens portions, the bridge portion, and arm portions, and being held on a nose bridge and both ears, wherein

a front surface of one end of the glasses holder is tightly fixed or attached in a detachable manner to the upper portion inner side of the opening of the main body, the holder is caused to hold the bridge portion so as to wrap the bridge portion in a loop shape, and rear surfaces of the one end portion and the other end portion of the holder are locked to each other in a detachable manner.

2. A hood, comprising:

a hood main body having an opening for exposing a face to a front surface; and

a belt-like or string-like holder for holding two sections of arm portions of glasses being worn on an eye area, having lens portions, a bridge portion, and the arm portions, and being held on a nose bridge and both ears, at two sections at an upper portion inner side of the opening, in such a manner that upper portions of lens portions of the glasses are accommodated in the upper portion inner side of the opening, wherein

a front surface of one end of the glasses holder is tightly fixed or attached in a detachable manner to the two sections of the upper portion inner side of the opening of the main body, the holder is caused to hold the two sections of the arm portions so as to wrap the two sections of the arm portions in a loop shape, and rear surfaces of the one end portion and the other end portion of the holder are locked to each other in a detachable manner.

3. An outerwear comprising the hood according to claim 1 or 2.