

-15-

Abstract

The invention is concerned with a process for transporting a solution of cellulose in an aqueous tertiary amine-oxide through a component wherein said cellulose solution has different flow rates in said component, characterized in that an outlet wherethrough part of said cellulose solution is discharged from said component is provided at a point within said component whereat said flow rate is relatively low.

(Fig. 2)