

ABSTRACT

A sectional door structure includes a door frame, having a pair of door posts having guide grooves and a cross beam connected to upper ends of the door posts; an upper door body, pivotally connected to the cross beam and having at least one pivot member on an inner surface thereof; a lower door body, pivotally connected to the upper door body and having rollers that are disposed on lower sections of both sides and fitted in the guide grooves; at least one guide rail, having a fixed seat connected to the door frame and a slide rail on one side thereof; at least one support member, including a support plate having at least one pivot hole and a guide portion at one end thereof; and at least one power-driven telescopic rod, having an actuating rod pivoted to the pivot member and a distal end pivoted to the pivot hole.

FIG. 5