

ABSTRACT

An energy patch includes a body, a dressing, and an energy-transmitting material. The body is adapted to be repeatedly attached to a skin of a human body. The dressing is disposed in the body. The energy-transmitting material is disposed in the body and the energy-transmitting material is adapted to transmit energy generated by the dressing.

(Figure 1)