

ABSTRACT:

In a magneto-optical switching element with a Faraday rotator, in order to increase the switching speed and to reduce the required switching energy respectively, the rotator consists of a magnetically uniaxial crystal, which features magnetic domains of both signs in each of its stable states, by means of which problems are avoided with the creation of domains of opposite signs at the beginning of the switching process.

(Fig. 1)

162162

G00002