

ABSTRACT

A data frame transmission method includes: determining that transmission of a data frame is switched from a first link to a second link; and in response to the transmission of the data frame being switched from the first link to the second link, carrying out retransmission counting of the data frame on the second link.

Fig. 1