ABSTRACT

A roadside apparatus includes a communication interface that transmits and receives information, an imager that captures images of pedestrians, an output interface that outputs information directed to the pedestrians, and a controller that transmits, to a vehicle, first information indicating approach of the pedestrians to a roadway based on the captured images, and then outputs second information for alerting the pedestrians to the vehicle.