

162162

Abstract

To enable the time required to produce an optical substrate on which one or more layers which influence the propagation of light are to be arranged to be reduced, and preferably to provide this optical substrate with significantly lower surface stresses, the invention describes the use of an application method and an optical substrate produced using this method, in which at least one of the layers comprises halogen atoms or a halogen compound as a result of the production.

G00002