ABSTRACT

This invention refers to pharmaceutical compositions containing synergistic combinations of pentacyclic triterpenoids as active principles and denotes that some specific combinations between these types of drugs exhibit effects for the prevention or inhibition of viral infections. The compositions are found in specific quantities and proportions that enhance the pharmacological properties of the compounds, improving their bioavailability and pharmacokinetic properties, while reducing their toxicological and irritability effects, especially in the respiratory tract and the lungs.

FIG. 1