

Abstract

A cylindrical lens 39 for generating focussing error signals is formed as one with a portion of an optical component 33 of a transparent material lying on an optical path L2 which is an optical path of a return light beam from the optical member 33.

This configuration assures a small size while reducing the production cost and improving operational reliability.

