ABSTRACT

CONTENT PRESENTATION

The present invention provides a method of presenting content. The method includes generating an access request in an end station, which is then transferred a base station. The base station provides an agent, which is then installed in, and implemented by the end station, thereby causing the agent to determine end station data indicative of an identity of the end station. The end station data is transferred to the base station which uses it to authenticate the presentation of the content.

Fig. 2