

ABSTRACT

A technique which determines an optimum die layout on a semiconductor wafer is disclosed. The technique determines the optimum die layout with a significantly reduced number of calculations compared to conventional brute force techniques. This enables the generation of the optimum die layout in a much shorter period of time, reducing design turn-around time. The optimum layout is used to process a wafer which produces the optimum number of dies.

Fig. 3