Field of the Embodiments

This invention generally relates to certain specialized therapeutic devices and their applications for the healing of alignments of the human body. More specifically, the present invention relates to portable, non-invasive therapeutic devices specifically adapted for integrative medicine and holistic healing for the treatment of various diseases.

Background of the Embodiments

From the earliest recorded human history, people have suffered from all kinds of diseases and injuries. According to ancient medical literature, such as the 4700-year-old Huang Di Nei Jing (Yellow Emperor's Classic of Internal Medicine), which is well regarded as the traditional Chinese medicinal bible, there is a long history of human's attempt to treat diseases and injuries by following the traditional medical doctrines and theories. Most of such early medicine consisted of various herbal remedies and, in the case of the ancient Chinese medical manipulation, acupuncture. In a sense, the basis of modern western medicine is formed, in part, from what was learned from the ancient Native Americans, Asians, Indians and Europeans.
