

G00002

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to a method and a device for applying a defined amount of a coating material onto the surface of an implant by means of a printing process, in particular using a printing roller. The invention also relates to the use of a printing process, in particular a printing roller, for applying a defined amount of a coating material onto the surface of the implant to be coated and to correspondingly produce coated implants.