

ABSTRACT

Disclosed herein is a method of detecting an arc generated in a semiconductor device. The method may comprise: performing a processing process for a substrate processing and collecting data according to the processing process; separating the collected data by setting sections; obtaining an average value and a standard deviation of the data separated for each section; and setting an upper limit and a lower limit for detecting the arc using the average value and the standard deviation.

[Fig. 10]