Abstract

A particularly simple procedure with simple means results from a method for the wet treatment of substrates with the help of a container into which a fluid is introduced and withdrawn via an overflow device if the overflow device floats on the fluid and drops and/or lifts together with the fluid surface. No mechanical devices are necessary for lifting and taking the substrates out of the fluid. Devices for the wet treatment of substrates and for carrying out this procedure are described.