Abstract

The invention relates to a prosthetic liner that directs sweat in upwards direction (anti-gravity) to reduce risk of potential skin damage due to moisture build up and enhance patient's comfort. The prosthetic liner comprises a plurality of microchannels. The plurality of microchannels are configured to collect and transport sweat. The invention also relates to a method for directing sweat in upward direction.

(Figure 1)