ABSTRACT

In an arrangement for locating faults in software, a history file 4 is created during running of the software, which file contains values for variables in the software which can then be reviewed in the event of system failure. Review can be carried out in a forwards, backwards or search mode, in the manner of conventional video-tape controls by means of a video type interface between a debugger 5 and the history file 4 created during running of the software.

This Sheet Has Been Replaced

