

WIRELESS NETWORK TYPE DETECTION METHOD AND APPARATUS, AND ELECTRONIC DEVICE

ABSTRACT

A determination is performed for whether a currently connected wireless network requires a password for accessing the internet through the wireless network based on at least one specified network address. In response to determining that no password is required, the specified network address is accessed. Whether the currently connected wireless network requires a secondary login verification is determined by determining whether the specified network address can be successfully accessed.

FIG. 1