Abstract

In the method for producing an immunoglobulin solution suitable for intravenous application with an IgM proportion of more than 5% by weight with respect to the immunoglobulin proportion, an IgM-containing immunoglobulin solution is treated with a protease . The intravenously well tolerated preparation obtained is characterized by not being chemically modified and by having low anticomplementary activity ACA.