

SYSTEMS AND METHODS FOR DETECTING FLUIDS

Abstract

Fluids such as saline solution that are disposed in containers such as contact lens packages can be detected by directing ultrasound energy at the container and receiving a return reflection of the ultrasonic energy. The ultrasonic energy and the return reflection can propagate through a shroud that substantially isolates the ultrasonic energy and the return reflection from air currents.

Figure 1